PRINCETON TURNED ACTOR

"DUCHESS OF BLUFFSHIRE" ITS NEWEST SHOW.

Pia; ed Twice at the Waldorf to the Entire satisfaction of an Audience of Graduates, Undergraduates and Admiring Women-Some Pleasant Music.

trery Princeton rooter and rooteress within striking distance of the Waldorf was on hand yesterday afternoon or last night, or both, to see how "The Duchess " Bluffshire" was going to measure up to the productions which the Triangle Club has given in former years. If the scattering comments of the audience as it edged its way out of the ballroom in the afternoon were a means of determining what ort of an impression was being taken away, it is a safe bet that the Duchess proved to be a lady of the most agreeable sort. Moreover, a lot of the musical numbers were so well received that the show had to be stopped in several places to supply enough encores.

But then everybody always goes to these plays with the intention of having a good time. There were the usual numbers of old graduates who always turn out whenever the horizon assumes an orange and black hue; they liked it because it came from Princeton, if for no other reason. Then there were the graduates who had been mixed up in dramatics when they were in college, and who love the smell of powder. Also present were unlimited numbers of undergraduates, who had come to the city expressly for the purpose of pointing out the features of the play to certain nice looking young persons with leanings toward Tiger Town. In the afternoon there were innumerable mothers and sisters and very bests and next to bests, besides delegations from lots of girls' schools, who had the time of their "The Duchess" really has a plot. Of course it isn't a profound plot, but there is a story. It all happened on the shores of Lake Como, which, as every conscientious tourist knows, is situated in northern Italy. It appeared that a certain Mr. Charlemagne Barrett, being an American gentleman of an artistic nature, had rented a villa by the lake with his exceedingly loquacious wife. She remarked early in the first act that she was anxious BUFFALO AND PAWNEE BILLS. who surprised Miss Shilling by admitting that he did not know that Shilling had to get back to a place where there were reople like herself-which place many in the audience thought it very unlikely that she would find-and thereupon Mr Barrett reminded her that he had planned a house party to divert her restless nature. The Duke of Blufshire, it developed, was already a guest at the Barretts', and when he learned that his wife had been invited also the old scamp arranged to have her coach held up by a band of the very bloodthirstiest sort of brigands and to have his tiresome wife kidnapped. The bandits get away with the holdup all right, and also with the Duchess, but that lady's maid. Jane Bartler, escapes with the family jewels and turns up at the Barretts' disguised as the Duchess. Of course the Duke can't admit that he has planned to have his wife run away with-that is, he can't in a comic opera without spoiling everything-and so he pretends that the Du chees's maid is the Duchess. F. L. Cunningham, '09, who is the president of the club this year and also one of the James de Magny Hardig, an American with such a breezy personality as played by N. F. Carroll '09 that he was nearly a typhoon, and Jacob Wilhelm Weinlander from Chicago, enacted by a promising freshman named E. M. Barnhart, elect themselves members of the house party. There also appear Mrs. Barrelt's niece, one Dorothy Darling, whose coffure and peach hasket hets are supported by Brown Rolston, '10, and a stalwart hero named Jack Levis, who according to the authors is "a youth of 25 years, smitten with the charms of the said Dorothy" and who is enacted by S. C. Potter, '10. Then the complications complicate.

There also appears wearing a necklace the said Dorothy and who is enacted by S. C. Potter, '10. Then the complications complicate the said Dorothy and who is enacted by S. C. Potter, '10. Jane appears wearing a necklace the brilliance of which dazzles the eyes of Hardig and Weinlander to such an extent Hardig and Weinlander to such an extent that they make a bet about its genuineness. Weinlander climbs up a trelliginto the maid's room while she is out and comes back with the necklace so that they can decide the bet. Just then she discovers that it is gone and the excitement which follows makes a lively finale to get except the finale to get except the second to finale to act one. It takes most of the second act for Jack to prove that he is fond of Dorothy and that she didn't take the necklace, although circumstantial evidence points at her. At the wrong time the rea! duchess turns up and gives the duke a sad few minutes explaining time the real duchess turns up and gives the duke a sad few minutes explaining things. Then he adds to the general confusion by declaring that the old necklace was only paste after all.

There were some lines which seemed to amuse the audience. When the real duchess enters and asks "Is this Mr. Barrett and wife?" Mrs. Barrett responds, "No, this is Mrs. Barrett and husband." Even the hero is permitted to be flippant at times. "A man never forgets to remember." he remarked at one point, but a girl always remembers to forget." Arthur H. Samuels, "09, wrote almost all of the music. Mr. Samuels also conducted the undergraduate orchestra with all of the music. Mr. Samuels also conducted the undergraduate orchestra with the utmost complacency, except when a poorly aimed bouquet caused him to duck his head. Once or twice the volleys of flowers came so fast that Mr. Samuels was in danger of syncopation but he seemed to be as full of nerve as he was of music and never once did his little stick falter. N. F. Carroll supplied most of the lyrics. One of the songs which pleased was "Terpsichore." in which Hardig and Dorothy assisted by "the twelve little girls" exhibited their nimbleness to a chorus which ran:

Terpsichore, Terpsichore, novel steps galore: roueites, minuets, dances by the score Pancing, prancing, most entrancing Terpsichore

Janeia two songs, "I Was Never So Put Out" and "I'm In Wrong," were well done by Mr. Cunningham, whose adroitly clumsy manner of handling his skirts made laughter. Then there was a quiet little song called "Fairyland," which was written by E. P. Nevin, '11, a son of the late Ethelbert Nevin. Mr. Nevin also hada hand in one of the opening choruses.
Along near the end of the play was a number called "The Villagers," in which tweaty or thirty of the chorus, including the "girls," were looking for the lost jewels. E. G. Bothwell, '09,/ wrote the music for the song.

SCHOOLGIRL HURRIES MEXICO

VERA CRUZ HAD HER BROTHER IN A CELL 18 MONTHS.

When at Last He Smuggled a Letter to Her She Went Down and Stirred Up Judge and American Embassy and Pop! Out He Came-New Wants Damages.

Josephine Shilling, a blue eyed girl of 17, was a pupil in the Holy Cross Convent school in this city last summer when she got a letter from her brother Frank, saying that he had been a prisoner in a jail at Vera Cruz for eighteen months and that he had been unable to communicate with anybody, but had succeeded in smuggling out the letter to her so that she might call the attention of the American Government to his plight and do what she could to help him.

Miss Shilling did not bother the American Government at first but left school immediately and went down to Vera Cruz. She returned yesterday by the Ward liner Merida, having, by persistent petitioning and by enlisting the sympathy of Americans in Mexico, obtained freedom for her brother. She told yesterday of the trouble she had had.

Her brother, who is a tobacco dealer in Ogdensburg, went to Mexico to see about srme tobacco property down there in which he was interested. While he was in Vera Cruz waiting for a steamship to take him to this city there was a street fight. He was looking on when a man ran up to him and said "You have robbed me of $2,700!" Shilling was arrested and put in a cell, which his sister says was so small that he had to sleep sitting. He was not allowed to communicate with any one or see a lawyer. He bribed a jailer to send the letter to his sister.

"When I was finally permitted to see my brother," Miss Shilling said, "he was a wreck. Rats ran over him while he slept or dozed crouching in a cell thirty-nine. or dozed crouching in a cell thirty-nine inches square. The food was unfit to eat. At first they would not let me see my brother. I employed Lawyer Zanora, and we persuaded Judge William Cabrera to allow me to take decent food to my brother. I made three trips a day to the. Prison."

another, Malina, who under her urging got into communication with the complainant in the case Rodolfo Rodriguez robbed him, but suspected that he knew something about the robberv. She went to the Judge again and told him in his native language, which she had mastered partly by close study in three months, that she wanted something done in the matter right away. He said it was impossible, as it was not the custom in Mexican urisprudence to do anything in a hurry.

Then she stamped her foot and declared that she would see that something was done in a hurry. She took the first train to the City of Mexico and put the case before the American Embassy. Before she got there the Vera Cruz brand of jurisprudence had got a move on and set Mr. Shilling free. She went back to Vera Cruz in response to a despatch from her Mr. Shilling free. She went back to vera Cruz in response to a despatch from her brother telling of his liberation. She wanted him to accompany her home, but he said he was going to stay and bring suit for damages.
